

It appears to me that these companies that can't seem to take "no" for an answer don't deserve to do business with me; therefore, they don't need to call me. If I need their services, I am quite capable of picking up my phone and calling them. This prior relationship nonsense is just that...nonsense. They are just trying to use the law to get a leg up on their competition instead of using good service to ensure repeat business.